RAISING REVENUE.

The Government needs revenues, and needs them right away. There are ceradding new ones, stamp taxes, etc.

These are not especially unpopular processes of getting revenue in ordinary circumstances. But these sources will not produce enough to make up the deficit, and so it is suggested that taxes be imposed on coffee and tea. coffee tax is doubtful. In time, of scandals. Yet the talk is all of raising course, it would bring in a steady and more money by new taxes instead of lot on the Senate side of Idaho, still a new some income. The chance for which you have waited For each of these involves an uncertain legal proposition, and the possibility of an adverse decision, and of the necessity, perhaps, of paying back n great sum after it had been collected, is not to be overlooked. What the Government needs right now is money, not experiments in constitutional construction. The internal revenues naturally suggest themselves as the resource on which to fall back.

This is in accordance with the broad principle laid down by Henry Carter Adams, who has shown conclusively that every nation ought to maintain at all times the complete, perfect, and working machinery of a comprehensive internal revenue system. When small amounts of money are needed, small taxes can be imposed; when more money is needed, the levies can be increased indefinitely. The point is always to have the system in operation and ready to assume new burdens. By this plan Government may be guarded against financial shocks, deficits, and even may be insured the capacity to !

ADELE VERNE HERE IN SECOND RECITAL

Pianist Scores Even Greater Success Than at First Performance.

Adele Verne, the distinguished planist, who created such a favorable impression here earlier in the season, returned to Washington for a second recital yesterday afternoon in the Columbia Theater. Miss Verne could scarcely have doubted the complete hold she has obtained upon the favor of Washington musicians and was given a series of pronounced ovations. The exquisite tone, rippling technique, and remarkable physical strength of the woman planist were given every opportunity for exposition in the delightful program that had been arranged.

Like Paderewski, Miss Verne excels in her interpretation of the works o Chopin and four of his compositions were included in yesterday's program The popularity of the ballad in A flat was again emphasized and the nocturne No. 2, in D flat was a genuine delight. It was in the fascinating rhythm of the waitz in G flat that the audience was completely captivated. Miss Verne was compelled to repeat this number before she was allowed to continue her program. The exacting score of the polonaise in A flat served to bring out the great strength and clear technique of Miss Verne and she scored a complete success in this interpretation in spite of the fact that it had been played here so recently by Paderewski.

One of the real pleasures of the afternoon was Miss Verne's remarkable reading of "The Wind," by Alkan, a composition which she played upon her first appearance here earlier in the season. she was allowed to continue her proposition which she played upon her first appearance here earlier in the season. The composition created a sensation yesterday equal to that it had caused at the first recital. It is not only a wonderful composition, but was played in a remarkable manner.

The return of Miss Verne next season or in the seasons thereafter should be ranked among the most important events of the musical year in Washington. Those who failed to hear her at either of her Washington concerts have missed one of the genuinely artistic af-

Feeling Runs High.

Feeling ran high among the men who gathered today to prepare the way for the coming convention of mine workers. The war spirit was plainly in evidence, and it is certain that were this body of men empowered to decide the question of peace or strike, the great majority would today declare in favor of a determined stand for all their demands no matter what the cost. The Zemper of the convention is not expected to be much more conciliatory.

Some of the more conservative miners are advocating the continuance of work without signing an agreement of any kind. As the operators refuse to recognize the miners as an organization, they can continue to work after April 1 mele-ly as employes and await a more favorable time to strike for their demands.
